The following is the original text written by Eugene Pulliam to be read at Laura's funeral. The portions of the text shown in brackets were omitted during the reading.

"Laura Pulliam's existence on the planet spanned almost a full century from horse and buggy days to travel through space -- through the time of the Spanish American War, the two World Wars, the Korean War, and the war in the Gulf.

She was born among the lush and rolling hills of Rappahannock County in the Blue Ridge foothills -- the second child of Jim Bill Coates and Gertie Cannon Coates, in the remote little valley between Scrabble and Castleton, in the typical six room house perched upon the side of a hill looking over the ice pond below, the fertile garden, the stone spring house alongside the best spring in the state of Virginia and the old stone mill, both predating the American Revolution.

Even until the day she died, Laura enjoyed telling her children about her life in this peaceful valley -- about her long walks to school in the little log schoolhouse on the nearby mountain, or later on, to the school in Woodville, traveling by horseback. She would tell about the hand sewn dresses lovingly stitched by her grandmother, Virginia Rudisill Cannon or her grandfather Cannon who served in the Confederate Army and who, after this bloody conflict, served as a constable in the county.

[Recently found in the attic of the old house was a school book atlas of Laura's grandmother in which her grandmother had penciled the words to popular Civil War ballads sung by the girlfriends and wives awaiting the return of their brave loved ones from battle. This tattered schoolbook was stained with the grease of hams which had been hidden in the attic away from the marauding union soldiers who often scavenged these peaceful valleys in the search for food during this awful conflict.]

Laura left this idyllic setting at the age of sixteen to elope with Silas Lillard Pulliam, who dubbed Laura's homeplace "Frog Pond Hollow". [She would recount the details of the elopement with great relish -- of how she and Lillard secretly traveled to Remington by buggy and boarded the train to Washington, D.C. where they were wed.]

In later years, Lillard was a merchant in nearby Woodville and on Sunday afternoons after church, they would gather their brood of five children and motor back to Frog Pond Hollow. There, Lillard would park the car across the branch from the house and Laura and her brood would traipse across the plank over the branch up the hill to the house where they would spend a few hours visiting with Grandma Gertie [while Lillard remained on the other side of the branch reading the Sunday paper.]

[Laura's children still recall fondly the Sunday dinners with Grandma Coates and her amazing dexterity in being able to use one hand and utensil to eat and the other hand to pull the rope to operate the newspaper-covered wooden frame hanging above the table to enable the frame to move back and forth over the table, thus serving the double purpose of cooling those seated at the table but primarily to ward off pesky flies.]

In 1929, Laura's life was tragically altered by three events. In awful sequence, Lillard's store was destroyed by fire, a tornado swept through peaceful Woodville destroying their home, and the Great Depression commenced. These sad events would lead to a severing of the family unit but eventual survival through the ensuing difficult times.

Throughout her life and despite her many hardships and sacrifices, Laura sustained her strength and courage because of an abiding faith in God that NEVER, NEVER left her. She was a proud mother who, until her last days on earth, expressed her deep love for her children, her seventeen grandchildren, her twenty-eight great grandchildren and her five great, great grandchildren.

This proud lady never gave up and ALWAYS, ALWAYS held her head high and taught her children to do the same. By example she taught them to be kind and giving, to strive to succeed, and to treat all the same regardless of color, class, or creed.

[In closing, I must tell you that despite declining health and vigor in her last years, this proud lady left detailed instructions for her funeral, including the color of her casket, her dress, the tombstone inscription, her corsage and even the length of this service -- B R I E F.]

But she also specified the theme of my comments:

Merely retelling this brief story of her early life embodies in itself the theme she desired all to follow, which was that people and families must live together peacefully with a never-ending faith in the almighty. These are the values instilled in Laura by her parents and grandparents, and all the other families who lived peacefully in these little valleys throughout the county.

About a week before her passing, and in rapidly declining health, Laura lay quietly on the sofa in the den one evening while the motion picture "The King and I" was being shown on television. Among the well-known Rogers and Hammerstein songs was the well-known tune, "Getting to Know You". Laura showed no signs of having paid any attention to this musical at all, but later on in the night, as she lay in her bedroom at the opposite end of the house, her son monitored all the sounds from her room as he remained in the den. Suddenly, after almost an hour of Laura's peaceful breathing, there came from the monitor on the table the faint and lilting sound of Laura's voice singing:

*'Getting to know you, getting to know all about you.
Getting to like you, getting to hope you like me . . . '*

As we quietly leave the chapel, it is fitting for us to hear those inspiring words which, indeed, guided Laura Pulliam throughout her long life."
